

WINTER INTERNSHIPS

The Program

The Environment Defenders Office is offering a limited number of two-week internships for June-July 2008.

Opportunities available include providing paralegal support in EDO cases, researching and updating publications, and contributing to policy and law reform projects in areas such as biodiversity protection and climate change.

Internships are voluntary however a weekly honorarium of $50 ($10/day) will be offered to each intern, to assist with travel and other expenses.

The internships are 9am-5.30pm Monday to Friday for two consecutive weeks, and are based in our office at the Green Building, 60 Leicester Street, Carlton.

Why apply?

Our internship program offers an opportunity to gain some practical experience in environmental law. Interns work with EDO lawyers and contribute to EDO projects and to our work for a range of conservation groups on public interest environmental law issues.

Who should apply

Law students with an interest in environmental issues and environmental law. Later year law students and those pursuing additional study in a related field such as science or environmental policy are encouraged to apply.

How to apply

Prospective interns should complete and return the internship application form available on the EDO website, together with their CV. To find the form go to www.edo.org.au/edovic/volunteers.html.

Please note that we receive many more applications than we have places available, but we are happy to keep your application for consideration in the next round of internships if you request this on your application form.

Applications for the 2008 Winter Internships program are due by 5pm, Monday 19 May 2008.

About the EDO

The EDO is an independent community legal service practising in public interest environmental law. The EDO assists individuals, community groups and non-government organisations with environmental law expertise. We also run community legal education workshops and seminars.
